PREFACE

This Pitman Shorterhand Dictionary has been prepared to meet the immediate needs of students, teachers and writers of Pitman Shorterhand for a work of reference that will provide the correct shorthand outlines for most of the frequently used words in the language.

This dictionary is a selected list of words and is not intended in any way to be comprehensive since only the words themselves and their shorthand outlines are given. The Publisher's purpose has been to produce a representative and, in the main, non-technical list of English words that are in common use, or that are likely to be used in dictation across a wide variety of activities in business, industry, the professions and authorship. Inevitably the choice of words for inclusion will not cover all requirements within the bounds of a volume containing between 16 000 and 17 000 entries, but it is hoped that the selection made will satisfy most day-to-day needs.

The list of place names includes all countries in the world and their capitals, and all the larger cities in major countries, especially those in Australasia, Canada, the United States and the British Isles. Many adjectives of nationality are also included.

All the pacers and most of the derivatives in Pitman Shorterhand are shown italicized in the main list and as a complete alphabetical list on page 233. A list of common metric units and their derivatives is included.

The list of proper names is highly selective and is restricted to those most commonly in use.

In order to include as many different words and outlines as possible, repetition has been avoided. For example, a proper name that is also a common word will usually appear in the main list only, and where a town name occurs in more than one country it is included in the list of place names once only. Many surnames are also common words and therefore are to be found in the main list.

Most plurals, present participles and past tenses, unless irregular, are excluded, since the shorthand outlines for these are formed on the regular pattern of circle S, the dot -ing, or the disjoined T or D, but the reader should remember that in some cases a derivative exists where, say, a present tense would rarely if ever be used. In these cases, the derivative is given. However, because shorthand outlines for comparatives, superlatives and adverbs differ, most adjectives are included with their derivatives.

Most homonyms and words with the same spelling but different meanings and pronunciations are included.

Shaded vowel signs appear in this dictionary to conform with the international version of Pitman Shorterhand, entitled Pitman 2000. Slight differences in vowel shading will not be significant to North American students of Shorterhand who do not use this principle, but will meet the needs of international Shorterhand writers.

The writer of Pitman Shorterhand will find it possible to write the shorthand outline for every word in the English language simply by following the rules of the system. It is our belief that as a result of using the Pitman Shorterhand Dictionary, all writers of Pitman Shorterhand will increase their basic vocabularies, will read more fluently from printed shorthand, and consequently will write their shorthand outlines with greater speed and confidence.
